1. Upon receipt of reference C, notifying Headquarters that [REDACTED] is now in the AI on leave, the undersigned contacted [REDACTED] by a long distance telephone call. [REDACTED] was advised that he was not to contact [REDACTED] in regard to reference A until he had reported in to Headquarters and conferred with us in regard to his answer to [REDACTED]. Our suggestion as to how the [REDACTED] matter should be handled was covered in reference B; but, unfortunately, it had not been received at Base A before [REDACTED] departed from there.

2. [REDACTED] informed the undersigned that rather than cancel or change plane reservations in order to report to Headquarters for one day prior to returning to Base A, he would just as soon wait until he had returned to his overseas station and form his report to [REDACTED] from the content of reference B. He was not anxious to spend a day in Headquarters just for this one item, but he agreed that he would rearrange his flight schedule if we deemed it necessary for other reasons for him to be in Headquarters for a day. Since at this time there is no special reason for him to come to Washington, considering the fact that he is willing to postpone the [REDACTED] situation until his return to Base A, he was advised to continue with his present airline reservations unless we subsequently notified him that it would be necessary to report to Headquarters.

3. His address and telephone number in Florida are included in his personal file.
